I wonder how much fate has to do with anything. On Saturday I was involved in a train accident that killed the driver of a Range Rover who must have been trying to beat the the train to the intersection. He lost in a tie. I use Tri Rail to get to the office because it's usually on time. 4 hours after our accident I was sitting with a guy on the bus they were using to transport us to the train stop just beyond where the accident occurred. He told me a couple of stops back they had thrown some drunk Cuban guy off the train for causing some kind of ruckus. This delayed the train getting to my stop in Hollywood by about ten minutes. Usually when Tri Rail is running late they pick up speed to make up some time and I'm sure we must have been doing about 80 MPH when we struck the SUV. Had there been no drunk on the train that day probably none of this would have happened. Oh yeah, and there was a full moon too. Strange strange day!
