In Flanders Fields

Almost a century ago Lieutenant Colonel John McCrea from Guelph Ontario wrote a poem during World War I called "In Flanders Fields" which he wrote while sadly looking at the grave of his friend Alex Hemer who was recently killed in action. As he gazed at all the crosses he began to notice that the only thing that grew amongst the graves were the poppies which inspired his immortal poem.
My old Jury band mate Bruce Walker while attending a remembrance day service last year had to endure someone's butchering of Mr. McCrea's poem so he decided to try and do something about it. Upon returning home he picked up his guitar, turned on the tape recorder and gave the world famous poem a melody. (click above) Bruce dedicates his song in remembrance to all the fallen soldiers of all wars. The rest of The Jury were there with you in spirit as you created it Bruce, nice work Man!.

When somebody likes you the odds are pretty good that you like them back.

?Politically correct is just another form of censorship.

?Rich people are only afraid of two things, other rich people and guns?.

?Having a career that you don't need a vacation from would be a worthy quest.

Being missed is a good thing, it usually means you must have done something good at sometime.?

When are we going to tell the government that when we gave them the right to be wrong but we didn't give them the right to live with their mistakes.

I just discovered today that I'm the only guy at the office who is in charge of the TV remote at home.

?Presumed innocence? like justice is only a concept.

How come you never hear "Ahab The Arab" - Ray Stevens on the radio anymore.

So we tried deregulation and it didn't work, what now!

The main difference between a hundred bottle of wine and a ten dollar one is the balls it takes to charge the hundred.

Speaking of balls, Brent Farris claims it's not enough to have 'em you have to use 'em!

If TV was never invented would Rock & Roll have ever been on the radio.

It is said that the youth of today prefer praise over money or sex, well I guess that just proves that I'm no longer a Young Turk.

I read somewhere that the only reason a woman would cheat on her husband was if he did everything she wanted because real men don't do that and a woman needs a real man every once in a while.

The 1st rule of "Show Business" is to get noticed but if you don't have any talent that might not be a good thing.

No matter how many people think it's about the technology it's still only about the artist.

When I once asked Rich Stevens what he was best at he claimed he was the world's best self promoter and now I finally believe him.

Some jocks like "The Magic Christian" were much more interesting off the air than on.

There is nothing more important to a human being than his own name.

Wouldn't it be fun just to hear about that one oil company finally went bankrupt.

Everything but greatness can be done cheaper.

Cell phones must have scared off all the UFO's.

Lobbyists do more harm than good but unfortunately the only people who can get rid of them are the the only people who derive any benefit from them.

Corporations are like sharks the only thing they are afraid of are larger

When I was a kid I took up guitar because I watched Chet Aikens play one on TV and he made it look so easy just like a lot of the great air talent.

If you want to make big money you have to dedicate your life to it and nothing else.

What people think usually has very little to do with what they actually know.

I think most woman are phenomenal but I'm fearful that some may fall into that category of ... ?Be careful of things that seem to good to? be true because they usually are. ?

Rich people only care about expenses, people who want to be rich only care about making money.?
